

Standing Orders

Your healthcare provider has given you a form (a 'requisition') that requests repeat lab tests (e.g. once each week, once every 3 months, etc). Tests ordered this way are called 'Standing Orders'.

The registration clerk and collector will:

1. Put an expiry date on your requisition,
2. Make a copy for their use at each visit,
3. Give you back the original for your next visit, and
4. Let you know when your requisition has expired.

Your requisition will expire one year after the date you received it. Once it expires you must visit your healthcare provider for a new requisition (if you still need one).

Remember:

- Have your blood tested at the intervals given by your healthcare provider.
- Bring your requisition with you each visit.
- Keep it until it expires.
- Be aware of when it will expire.

Prepared by: Pathology & Laboratory Medicine ©
QY85-1635 Created July 2016

Standing Orders

Your healthcare provider has given you a form (a 'requisition') that requests repeat lab tests (e.g. once each week, once every 3 months, etc). Tests ordered this way are called 'Standing Orders'.

The registration clerk and collector will:

1. Put an expiry date on your requisition,
2. Make a copy for their use at each visit,
3. Give you back the original for your next visit, and
4. Let you know when your requisition has expired.

Your requisition will expire one year after the date you received it. Once it expires you must visit your healthcare provider for a new requisition (if you still need one).

Remember:

- Have your blood tested at the intervals given by your healthcare provider.
- Bring your requisition with you each visit.
- Keep it until it expires.
- Be aware of when it will expire.

Prepared by: Pathology & Laboratory Medicine ©
QY85-1635 Created July 2016